

The major mission of Beth Israel Hospital is to deliver patient care of the highest quality, in both scientific and human terms. This mission is to be carried out within a framework of financially responsible management which is sensitive to the requirements both to deliver health care which is efficient and cost-effective and to be considerate of the overall health needs of the populations of concern to the hospital.

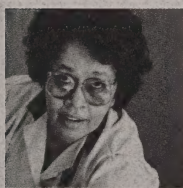

Patient care at Beth Israel Hospital is to be provided in a context of clinical teaching, through the participation and teamwork of clinicians, teachers, research scientists, and others who are also the sources of innovation and progress for future improvement in care capabilities. The strength of Beth Israel is partly attributable to its role as a major teaching hospital affiliated with Harvard Medical School; to maintain and strengthen that role, the hospital will continue to exercise leadership through excellence in teaching and research activities as well as in its clinical services.

The strength of Beth Israel is also attributable to its mix of physicians — those whose primary activities are directed toward the broad practice of clinical medicine and those whose activities focus primarily upon teaching, research, and more delineated clinical practice. While it is recognized that either group partakes of some of the activities of the other, it is understood that both are essential to the future of Beth Israel Hospital. The continuing productive and complementary relationship of each with the other shall be fostered, within the limits of available resources, in support of the hospital's overall mission.

Although the strong humanist tradition that characterizes Beth Israel Hospital arises in part out of its Jewish community origins, Beth Israel has been viewed from its inception as a nonsectarian organization evolving out of the founding and continuing effort of its Jewish community for the benefit of the community at large. The hospital will continue to promote actively the utilization of its facilities and services by practitioners and patients of every faith, race, and nationality, and to provide equality of opportunity in its employment practices. The hospital will maintain relationship to the community, with providing a leadership health-care needs of planning for those

At the same time, the its special and close Greater Boston Jewish particular view toward role in assessing the that community and in needs to be met.

THE STATE OF THE HOSPITAL

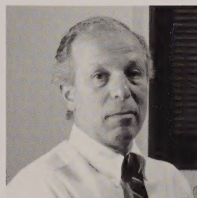

This past year was surely one of the most challenging in Beth Israel's history. The hospital faced severe cutbacks in both Medicare funding by the federal government and vital financial assistance from the state. Despite these fiscal troubles, and only with much effort by employees, staff, and trustees, we have managed to maintain Beth Israel's traditional high standards of patient care, teaching, and research.

The scientists of Beth Israel continue to break barriers in discovering the causes and treatments of disease. Physicians and other professionals are providing quality in patient care and establishing the foundations for future care in the training of students. Our nurses are recognized as the national model for the nursing profession. High quality has been sustained under increasing pressure to move very sick patients through their hospitalizations as swiftly and efficiently as possible.

MITCHELL T. RABKIN, MD
president

However, we now must look increasingly within the institution to find funds to provide care to the elderly, the uninsured, and the homeless. This will mean cutting back more, but the quality of care Beth Israel delivers must not change. Because we will need to manage creatively, the hospital is implementing a participative management program called PREPARE/21, keynoting our determination to prepare Beth Israel for the 21st century. This program, which

DAVID DOLINS
*executive vice president
and director*

encourages the creativity and participation of all employees, will provide a formal system for them to contribute and be recognized for ideas that improve quality, costs, or efficiency. With proper direction and people who care, the hospital will survive this financial storm and work to uphold the tradition created in the early days of this century.

COMMITMENT TO QUALITY

Whether it's a physician sleeping on the floor next to a frightened patient in the emergency unit, a medical team relentlessly performing tests to find the cause of an unknown illness, or a nurse following a patient's progress long past his or her discharge, the health professionals at Beth Israel are constantly striving to provide the quality of care that makes this hospital different from others. As a team, the people of Beth Israel care for patients using modern technology and a commitment to humanizing the delivery of medical care.

PAUL, KRISSY, ALBA, AND LEWIS EHRLICH

"For the first time in our lives we can make plans," says Lewis Ehrlich. Ehrlich, his wife Alba, and his children Krissy, 10, and Paul, 13, are looking forward to vacations they thought they'd never be able to take. In June of 1988, 40-year-old Ehrlich was the first patient at Beth Israel to have a simultaneous kidney and pancreas transplant, performed by Dr. Michael Shapiro. Diabetes had made Ehrlich dependent on kidney dialysis. After he suffered a stroke, his prognosis was bleak. Faced with giving up their plumbing business and selling their home, the family realized that only a transplant would keep Ehrlich alive. Dr. Theodore Steinman, the nephrologist (kidney specialist) who treated Ehrlich, encouraged the family to live as normally as possible, but it wasn't until the phone call came from the hospital that they were able to breathe a sigh of relief. "We were sitting at the kitchen table after eating dinner and the

housekeeper

"This is a happy floor because of the mothers and babies. I enjoy seeing the patients and helping them and the nurses in any way I can."

surgeon

"Obviously, the patient and physician develop a special sort of relationship. That sort of personal interest, in addition to the professional involvement, can't help but contribute to the quality of overall care."

THEODORE STEINMAN, MD
renal specialist

"I think I reflect BI's commitment to the total well-being of patients. It's important to pay attention to the psychosocial aspects of the patient, as well as to medical problems. A good example of this is the psychological preparation of a patient who is facing an organ transplant."

MALISSA BRAVERMAN, MD
medical resident

"The emergency unit is my favorite rotation because nurses and house staff focus on important issues of patient care. There is a close working relationship among the health-care team and the patients, during what is often a frightening time. The physician and nurse provide the medical and emotional support patients need as they enter the hospital."

KENNETH SANDS, MD
medical resident

"All of us enjoy the science of medicine, but it's the human element that sets it apart from other sciences. The bonds we form with our patients, both in outpatient units and on the floors, make practicing a privilege."

NICANOR SANCHEZ
patient escort

"I try to make patients feel more comfortable by having a calming effect on them. They feel safe and secure while being moved from place to place in the hospital."

DOE SPROGIS

phone rang. It was Dr. Steinman saying he thought they had a donor and I should come right in," remembers Ehrlich.

The leading-edge research performed each day at Beth Israel also benefits Reverend Emmett Watkins, who has AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome). Watkins participates in an experimental drug treatment protocol with AZT (azidothymidine) and aerosolized pentamidine. Although he takes part in an important trial that collects valuable research information, Watkins feels he is an "individual" at Beth Israel. In some experimental cases, he claims, "you can become a statistic instead of a human subject, but I don't feel that here."

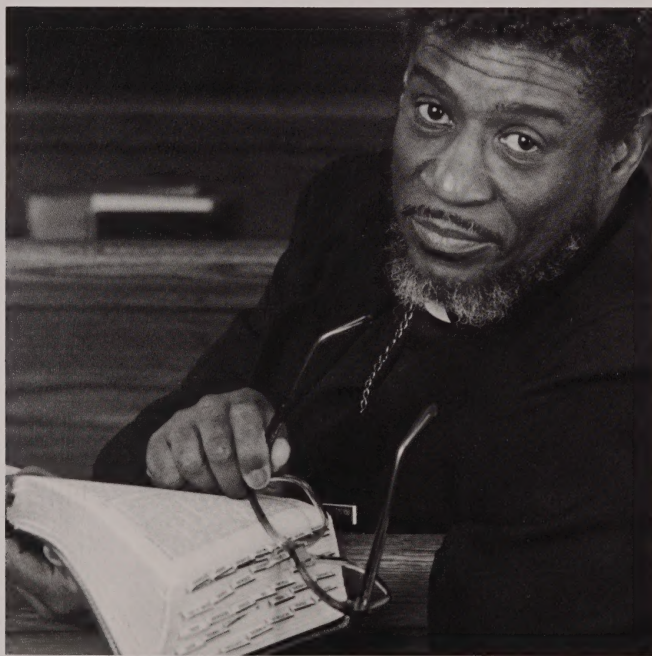

"They never gave up," says Doe Sprogis, a Beth Israel patient with a rare respiratory disease. Plagued for months with worsening flu-like symptoms, Sprogis came to Beth Israel. At the time of her visit with Dr. David Eisenberg, she was virtually too weak to get out of bed. Eisenberg admitted Sprogis to the hospital to find the cause of her illness. After many tests she was diagnosed with Wegener's disease, which causes swelling and deterioration of the respiratory tract and surrounding blood vessels, and can result in kidney failure. Eisenberg and his colleagues prescribed a series of medications and Sprogis rapidly began to feel better. She now controls the disease with immunosuppressive medication and is currently in remission.

Sprogis attributes the diagnosis to the fact that Beth Israel is a teaching hospital. "Every new path was explored," she recalls. Because only a handful of people suffer from Wegener's, her case was reviewed by almost every medical student and house officer in the hospital. "Because my disease is so rare, they were all watching my progress. That's how they will learn. I wouldn't go anywhere else but a teaching hospital."

"It was so awesome, the idea of having a breast taken off and one put on," remembers Eleanore Kaplan. Diagnosed with breast cancer and facing a mastectomy, Kaplan began researching breast reconstruction. Her mastectomy was performed by Dr. Clinton Koufman, and was immediately followed by reconstructive surgery. "Thank God this happened in the 1980s, with all the new technologies," she says. She fondly remembers how Dr. Sumner Slavin, who performed the reconstruction, made a special trip to her vacation home to check out a potential problem after her surgery. "Now that's a caring doctor," she says.

More recently Kaplan was admitted to Beth Israel through the Berenson Emergency Unit for an intestinal blockage. "Dr. Koufman came in at 4 in the morning to find out what was wrong." She also recalls a resident who stayed with her while waiting for the results of her tests. Kaplan's husband found this physician catching precious moments of sleep close by. Needless to say, in a sometimes scary situation like a hospital emergency room, a friendly expert by your side is comforting.

REVEREND EMMETT WATKINS

The commitment and closeness formed between patient and caregiver can be rewarding but can also take a toll. Watkins recognizes this in his research nurse, Sheila Hussey, RN,

CLYDE CRUMPACKER, MD
AIDS researcher

"Since there is no cure for AIDS at this time, the relationship between the patient and health-care provider involved in experimental therapy has to become a partnership as both work to try to find treatments for the disease."

ROSA AVILA, RN
nurse

"Taking care of patients with AIDS is both very rewarding and challenging. As a primary nurse I'm able to provide them with a sense of security and understanding about their illness."

KATHLEEN TELESFORD
information services
supervisor

"Often people who come to the information desk are nervous and apprehensive. Volunteers and staff try to be friendly, informative, and help them get to their destinations quickly. Humor, a joke, or laughter—it all helps let people know we're friendly and supportive."

ENID RODE
head cashier

"In my contact with patients and families, I answer any questions I can and direct them to those who can handle their other needs. Since I'm one of their last contacts with the hospital it's important that I be helpful."

and his doctor, Clyde Crumpacker. He is aware when there has been a death of a fellow patient. "They are personally affected by these losses."

Watkins feels it is important to his well-being to counsel and inform others about AIDS. He attends many conferences on the disease, and maintains his ministry with the Morning Star Metropolitan Community Church in Worcester, Mass. He appreciates his physician's ability to recognize what is important to him and schedule his care around those events. "We've grown together as a team."

Primary nursing at Beth Israel contributes to the comfort and intimacy patients share with their caregivers. Each patient is assigned a specific nurse to manage his or her 24-hour program of care. This results in the development of a strong relationship between nurse, patient, physician, and family. The nurse becomes well-versed on the patient's medical problem because of constant contact and monitoring. Primary nursing often initiates a unique emotional bond between patient and nurse. Many times Beth Israel nurses follow patients' progress well past inpatient discharge.

When Leslie Levin's amniotic membrane burst six months into her first pregnancy, she was bedridden at Beth Israel for several weeks to prevent premature labor. To complicate matters, the umbilical cord was resting on the baby's head, forcing Levin to be tipped backwards in bed to avoid placing weight on the cord. During those weeks Mary Ryan, RN, was her nurse. "I thought it was fabulous, knowing I had a kind of liaison," Levin says. Ryan was able to follow Levin's case and be sensitive to not only her physical demands, but also to the strong emotions she was experiencing because the baby's survival was questionable.

Levin delivered a boy, Keith, two months early. He spent weeks in the hospital's special-care nursery as his lungs matured. Levin recently had Keith's nurse, Priscilla Frappier, RN, over for dinner. Frappier enjoys not only the Levin family's company, but also likes to watch the progress a very healthy Keith is making.

The personal relationships formed during a hospital experience benefit not only the patient but also the nurse, who is able to follow an illness from beginning to end. When Sprogis re-entered the hospital for complications of her disease, special arrangements were made to have her placed in a room on the floor where she was originally diagnosed. She was treated by the same primary nurse as before. This nurse was very helpful in explaining to Sprogis how to take care of herself when she went home. "When I left the hospital, everything was explained to me," she says. "That's very important because the hospital is a security blanket and leaving can be frightening." The frequent follow-up testing she is required to have is made easier by courteous technicians and office personnel who realize the importance of keeping waiting times to a minimum.

JOYCE MCKENZIE
second cook

"With the dieticians' help, I make sure that each patient eats balanced and nutritious meals. It's important the food tastes good and stays hot or cold so that patients can enjoy their meals here."

KATHY HANLEY, RN
nurse

"As a nurse at Beth Israel Hospital, it is exciting to take part in procedures that offer new directions in patient care. It's challenging because we sometimes have to 'invent the wheel' as we go along. But with everyone's hard work, enthusiasm, and ingenuity, we succeed in giving men and women a new outlook on life."

ELEANORE KAPLAN

"I don't know who she was, but she was always there whenever I opened my eyes during the night," recalls Kaplan about the night following her surgery, perhaps the most frightening time of her hospitalization. "When you needed a lot of care they were there," she says. She is feeling so well now she is counseling other breast cancer patients on the possibilities of reconstruction and considers those encounters very important.

Ehrlich refers to himself as Shapiro's "baby" because the surgeon closely monitors his progress. In fact, the transplant was so pioneering that many on the Beth Israel staff have taken a special interest in Ehrlich's health. He points out that a hospital experience at Beth Israel is made as pleasant as possible not only by those who provide medical care, but also by the housekeeping staff, the transporters, and those who brought him his meals. Every employee made a difference in his stay.

Those who provide care for Watkins understand the stigma and stress associated with AIDS. His health-care providers at Beth Israel are knowledgeable about the disease, how it's transmitted, and how to care for those who have it. "I feel I'm getting the very best. It's very comfortable here." Watkins' medical team members are constantly consulting with one another to determine the best treatment. Diabetes complicates his case because he is unable to take certain medications. His research team, his team from Beth Israel's outpatient unit, Healthcare Associates, and his nurses communicate on all prescribed methods of care.

Because Watkins' life revolves around giving to others, he possesses a very positive attitude. Beth Israel strives to promote this kind of optimism. "I've been in and out of the hospital

plastic surgeon

"There has been major progress in the field of breast reconstruction during the past 10 years. Now, a woman can choose from a diversity of techniques. The goal of breast reconstruction remains the same—not so much to replace what has been lost, because that is not truly possible, but rather to restore a woman to as normal a lifestyle as possible."

so many times it doesn't scare me anymore," says hospital veteran Ehrlich. "I don't like hospitals, but if you have kind people caring for you, you can do it"

The support Beth Israel nurses and obstetrician Dr. Ronald Marcus provided when Levin expressed interest in breast-feeding her baby was important. "I'm really very thankful that the nurses were encouraging and knowledgeable in helping me breast-feed" Because Levin could not be part of much of Keith's care while he was in the special-care nursery, breast-feeding was doubly important because it was one of the few ways she could participate in his well-being and growth. Under those circumstances, developing a parent-child bond was difficult and the day he was allowed to go home with his parents was particularly joyous.

KEITH, LESLIE, AND RICK LEVIN

With many positive experiences at Beth Israel behind them, the Ehrlichs are looking to the future. "I didn't expect to live this long," Ehrlich comments. "He never thought he'd make it to 40," says his wife. It is hard to believe he was as sick as he was just one year ago. He no longer depends on insulin, his diet is not restricted, and he's back to working 60 hours a week.

The combination of modern technology, highly qualified medical professionals, and compassion for patients makes Boston's Beth Israel Hospital different from other health-care institutions, and it's the patients, who fondly remember their care, that make the extra effort worthwhile.

MARY RYAN, RN
nurse

"While a patient is separated from home and loved ones, I'm able to be part of a collaborative effort, ensuring that their physical as well as psychosocial needs are met."

CHARLES GRANT
patrol manager

"Whether it's walking a wife or daughter to the garage or helping a nervous new dad get the keys out of his locked car, as long as patients know that someone is here, helping the ones they worry about, they'll rest a little easier. I think a hospital is one of those places where a little can mean a lot."

PRISCILLA FRAPPIER, RN
nurse

"The special relationship I develop with each family is facilitated by my being the baby's primary nurse. Parents are able to form a relationship with me that is both professional and trusting."

EUGENE C. WALLACE
vice president, finance

Beth Israel's financial operating results are representative of the crisis in health care. Where the hospital once had positive operating margins, we now have negatives. The numbers are almost too large to comprehend. The assets of Beth Israel Hospital exceed $300 million, but many of these assets are restricted as to their purpose and not available to help solve the operating budget shortfalls. How can this institution, and others like it, continue to meet the needs of patients while losing money from operations for two concurrent years?

Beth Israel is a nonprofit institution but the reality is that it must generate a profit from operations, like any for-profit company, to thrive for the long-term. The "profit," in our case plowed directly back into hospital operations, goes toward the ever-growing cost of remaining first-rate in the future. As business writer Peter Drucker counsels, "managers . . . have responsibility for earning the costs of staying in business."

We are most concerned with having the funds to take care of patients. However, we are also financially accountable to employees, physicians, vendors, government agencies, and bond holders. The hospital is faced with massive cutbacks in Medicare, Medicaid, and other government reimbursement, yet must balance its budget.

The task of balancing the budget is not easy because one group must not receive its funds at the expense of another. Yet a thorough review of costs indicates we have eliminated virtually all that is nonessential and still fall short of funds. As we look to the future we clearly see our nation's hospitals in a financial crisis that will grow as we struggle to provide quality care in the face of virtual epidemics resulting from drug abuse, urban violence, the aging of our population, and catastrophic illnesses such as AIDS.

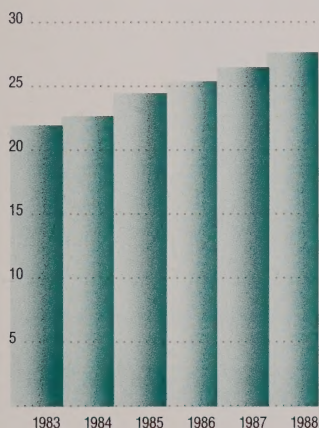

Beth Israel will continue to investigate ways to manage during this critical period, recognizing that it is difficult to find more ways to cut costs without cutting vital services to patients. In addition to our own initiatives, we will be looking to our nation's leaders to address the importance of providing quality medical services to all.

DONORS

Beth Israel Hospital Boston

What started out in the early 1900s as a small group of community leaders in the Boston area has blossomed to include people from all across the United States and abroad. The donors to Beth Israel Hospital share the common goal of making life better for all. By giving to Beth Israel they further the research and development of life-saving medical techniques and equipment, and train the health providers of tomorrow.

On the following pages are the names of those who have generously supported the hospital through designated and unrestricted contributions. Please note the section that highlights Beth Israel Giving (BIG), the hospital's annual campaign, which gathers funds for the general operating budget. During these times of fiscal uncertainty resulting from economic pressures beyond the hospital's control, these funds are especially important because they allow Beth Israel to continue to provide care to those who cannot afford it and to move forward in establishing treatments for all patients.

Our gratitude goes to all donors and we invite everyone to pursue this unique way of participating in the provision of high-quality medical care at Beth Israel Hospital.

BETH ISRAEL GIVING (BIG) FISCAL YEAR 1988

Beth Israel Giving (BIG) is the hospital's annual campaign. Funds raised through BIG are used for the general operating support of the hospital. During this fiscal year, 27 September 1987 through 24 September 1988, the individuals and organizations whose names appear below made contributions to the hospital through one of five donor clubs.

CLINICAL CHIEFS CLUB

The Clinical Chiefs Club, new in fiscal 1988, honors the hospital's major donors, those contributing $2,500 or more to Beth Israel Giving.

MATCHING GIFT COMPANIES

The companies listed below have contributed to Beth Israel during the 1988 fiscal year through their corporate matching gift programs. Corporate sponsorship of this kind allows individual contributors to double, sometimes triple, the amount of their gifts to Beth Israel. At the same time, this generosity affords Beth Israel the benefits that corporate sponsorship makes possible.

Digital Equipment Corporation
 General Cinema Corporation
 The Gillette Company
 John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company
 International Data Corporation

International Minerals and Chemicals Corporation
 Monsanto
 Pfizer, Inc.
 Polaroid Foundation, Inc.
 Property Capital Trust

PLANNED GIFTS

Beth Israel's Planned Giving Program offers new opportunities for charitable support. It provides various ways of planned giving which offer immediate benefits to the donor and long-range benefits to both the donor and the hospital.

Planned giving makes it possible for those who might want to help Beth Israel to do so without parting with spendable income. The planned giving options often give donors an increase in immediate tax deduction, an avoidance of capital gains tax, and a possible reduction in costly estate taxes.
